Shropshire sheep

Shropshire sheep are a very useful breed, dating back to the mid 1800's when farmers in the West Midlands improved the hardy native heath and hill sheep of the region.

Their good traits are:

1. Shropshire ewes make excellent mothers. They are milky and prolific, successfully rearing multiples and producing lambs over many years.
2. They are hardy, docile, and easy-care, enabling efficient flock management with minimal time and effort.
3. They produce top quality lambs - frequently grading as U and R for conformation.
4. They have a well-established track record for grazing in conifer plantations without damaging the trees.
5. More recently they have been used for environmentally friendly weed and herbage control in orchards.
6. Also, vineyard growers are learning of the useful traits of Shropshire's too.
7. Shropshire wool is good quality and suitable for knitting yarn.

For anyone interested in talking about their uses in the above, we will have experienced keepers of the breed available to answer any of your questions on the day of the sale.

Conformation and Locomotion

In addition to the requirements detailed in the previous section, the action or the way an animal moves is an important consideration especially for exhibition and can make the difference between first and second place. Pauline Bowles, a renowned judge and exhibitor of Shropshire sheep wrote “Usually your preferred animals virtually choose themselves: they catch your eye by their alertness and stance. A good sheep has a leg at each corner and when it moves its back foot should follow behind the front, in a straight line from the knee and hock downwards. Back feet should be seen to be lifted. Sheep which fail to lift their hind legs and are seen to ‘shuffle’ suggest a narrow pelvis. A lifted walk is desirable and indicates a wide pelvis, which in turn should make for easier lambing.

For perfect conformation in a sheep, cow, dog or cat, the symmetry should be right. This is how it was described by a top Friesian breeder. Measure your animal, the following inter-point distance should be of equal length:-

- Tip of nose to the top of the poll
- Poll to point of shoulder
- Point of shoulder to middle of back
- Middle of back to the front end of the loin
- Base of tail to hip joint
- Hip joint to stifle joint
- Stifle joint to the point of the

- hock
- Point of the hock to the ground
- Point of withers to the point of the shoulder
- Point of shoulder to middle of knee joint
- Middle of knee joint to the ground
